Description of Property and Eligibility Determination (Use continuation sheet if necessary and attach map and photo)

The c. 1960 one-story house is a vernacular design of the Ranch style. The front gable of the south elevation has a lean-to greenhouse and the house has aluminum or vinyl siding. The roof line from the front gable continues west at a slight downward slope and this part of the house has the main entrance and a ribbon of four windows. The eastern section of the house has a side gable roof.

The increase in population and development in Southern Maryland after the first quarter of the 20th century required the improvement of existing roadways and the introduction of new routes. The extension of the Crain Highway to the Potomac and the completion of the Governor Harry W. Nice Memorial Bridge spanning the Potomac River Bridge near Pope's Creek in 1940 served to link Southern Maryland with transportation networks from Florida to New York. The increase accessibility of Prince George's County to the nation's capital and other sections of northern Maryland led to an increase in development and traffic. Prince George's County and its suburban development expanded quickly in the latter half of the century as the northern section of the county served as a satellite community for the workforce of the nation's capital.

The c. 1960 house is not eligible for the National Register. According to the 1995 Reconnaissance Survey, a c. 1910 barn was sited on the property. The barn was not accessible and could not be studied for this survey. While the house is typical of the vernacular design in the northern sections of Prince George's County, the resource lacks significance related to events, persons, or architecture. Criterion D, information potential, was not assessed for this study.
